TERRY HAMPTON is the Tom Selleck of superbike racing.

Terry, who shares dark good looks with the sexy TV star, races his bike 130 miles per hour around the track while female fans ogle him and scream.

One of the top riders in the world, he grabbed a spot in the Top Ten international point standings last year, finishing 10th in the Superbike class of motorcycle road racing. He's been racing bikes for 16 years.

"You have to be in good shape to ride a superbike," he says. "It's a combination of puzzle, game and sport."

"Puzzle, because you have to figure out what modifications will make a bike perform best on the track," he says.

"Game, because it's one of ever-changing strategy as the riders jockey for position," according to Terry.

"Sport, because it demands a finely-tuned cardiovascular system to help ward off mental fatigue, plus muscles strong enough to wrestle a bike under three times the force of gravity," he says.

Muscles

Muscles Terry has, and the girls know it.

Diana, who describes herself as a 'superbike groupie,' says, "My heart goes racing every time I see Terry on the track."

"He's handsome, he is very masculine, and he has the kind of sexiness that Tom Selleck shows on TV," she says.

"I think he's really great."

Terry makes his home near Greenwood, IN.

Dominant

He grew up in Clermont, a stone's throw from Indianapolis Raceway Park and not far from the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

His goal is to be a dominant force in the international sport of superbike racing.

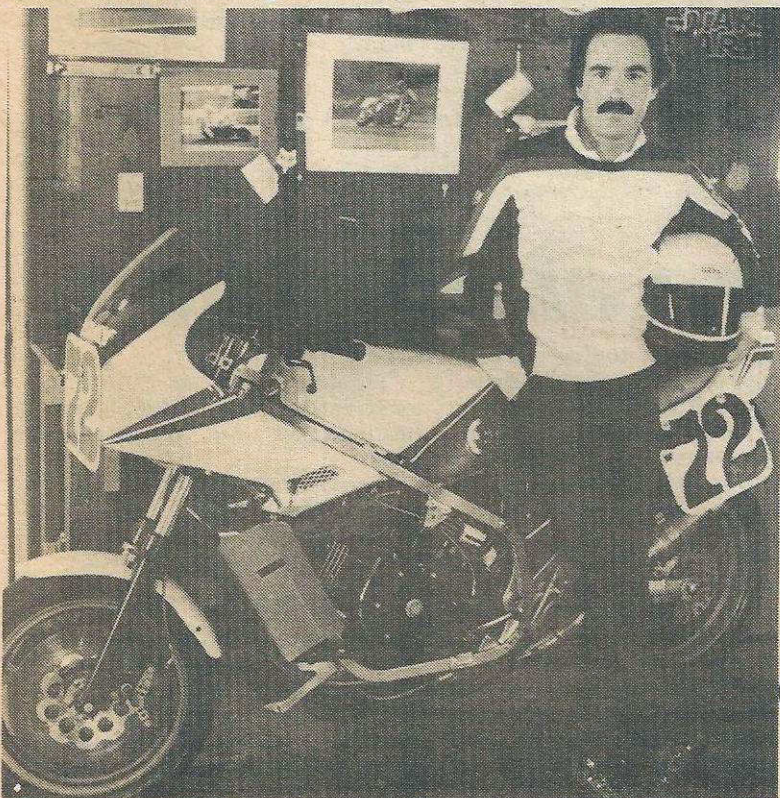

"I figure with a minimum of four bikes, plenty of extra parts, and a yearly budget of $750,000 to $1 million, we could be right at the top of the competition," Terry says.

Knocks

"The problem is raising the money," says Terry with a smile.

Terry has suffered his share of knocks, being thrown more than half a dozen times and sustaining injuries.

"When you're going into a turn at 130 miles per hour, it's dangerous."
