The fact that Valentino Rossi remains undefeated since the start of MotoGP and he also boasts Championships in every other category of the modern era easily marks the fun-loving Italian as one of the greatest riders the sport has seen. A composed, natural style mixed with an entertaining degree of showmanship and flamboyance, Rossi is the current crown jewel of MotoGP.

After success in World Superbike Colin Edwards arrived to MotoGP in 2003 and although he has ridden for a different team every season he will begin his second term with Yamaha in 2006. The lively Texan has only failed to score points in 5 from 49 Grand Prix in the last three years proving an apt foil to Rossi in the factory set-up.

The former 250cc World Champion was the revelation of the 2005 MotoGP Championship in only his third season in the category. Melandri battled injury during 2003 and only started to show his true potential during 2004 where he picked up the first of his nine podiums in just two years. 2005 and a close fight with Rossi in Turkey delivered a maiden victory.

Sete Gibernau was Rossi's main title threat in 2003 and 2004. The Spaniard is responsible for some of MotoGP's tightest and most exciting races in recent years thanks to his tussles with the World Champion. The new Ducati signing is the only rider to come close to the Italian in terms of race wins since 2002 with eight Grand Prix victories in three seasons.

Alex Hofmann is the sole German rider in MotoGP. The 25 year old will begin his eighth season as a recognized face in the World Championship paddock and rides a Ducati in 2006 after developing the Kawasaki MotoGP project for the last three years. Hofmann was beset with injury troubles in 2005 but will be looking to re-establish himself as a consistent top ten runner over the course of this campaign.

Jose Luis Cardoso is well known among Spanish fans for being something of a journeyman. The experienced rider from Sevilla has competed in every Grand Prix class in an intermittent World Championship career that started in 1993. He makes a comeback to MotoGP after a three year absence in which he raced national Superbike and Formula Extreme.

Kenny Roberts' 500cc title triumph in 2000 made him the first son of a former Champion to also hold the honour. The opening year of the century also marked Suzuki's last World Championship success. Roberts developed the four-stroke for the factory for the last five seasons but now joins his father in an ambitious Honda backed project for 2006.

After blazing a trail through 125 and 250cc competitions for the last four years Casey Stoner came close to World Championship success in 2005, and took his runner-up position to Dani Pedrosa as a sign to follow his Spanish rival into MotoGP. Stoner is the fourth most successful Australian Grand Prix rider in history and is still only 20 years old.
